and what they mean in Scotland

qualifications framework

So you've been in the armed forces and are about to enter civilian life in Scotland. There's a lot to think about and one of the main priorities may well be getting a job or entering further learning. You'll have gained some qualifications whilst being enlisted, not to mention a whole wealth of skills and experience. But what does this all mean? That's where the Scottish Credit and Qualifications Framework (SCQF) can help.

What is the SCQF?

- It's Scotland's lifelong learning Framework.
- It covers a wide variety of qualifications from school, college, university and the workplace.
- It clearly shows that qualifications have the same worth whether achieved through school, college, university or the workplace.

What can the SCQF do?

- It can help you understand more clearly the qualifications landscape in Scotland.
- It can help you plan your future learning journey.
- It can help employers and institutions understand the qualifications you have gained.
- It can help you understand your transferable skills.
- It can help you progress in your learning and gain credit for what you've achieved.

The SCQF diagram

- Below is the official diagram for the SCQF. You can see all the standard Scottish qualifications from level 1 (easiest) to level 12 (most difficult).
- There are over 11,500 qualifications on the SCQF and around 900 that recognise learning undertaken in the workplace or locations other than learning institutions.
